

Massive Stars

A massive star is about one and a half to three times as big as our sun. Once a massive star has nearly used up all its fuel, it explodes in a dramatic supernova and then shrinks down into a neutron star, an incredibly dense object.

